Cover picture: A false-color image of synapsin II-immunoreactivity in a section through the olfactory bulb of a rat. Red indicates the highest levels of immunoreactivity, while blue and black show the lowest. The round, red structures at the top of the image are glomeruli that contain the terminals of the olfactory receptor cells. The high level of synapsin II-immunoreactivity in these terminals is unusual. See Stone et al., pp. 301–309.

Erratum: In a series of deoxyglucose (DG)-labeling experiments (Tootell RBH, Hamilton SL, Silverman MS, Switkes E, 1988, Functional Anatomy of Macaque Striate Cortex I: Ocular Dominance, Binocular Interaction, and Baseline Conditions. J Neurosci 8:1500–1530), some animals were injected with a low dose (0.05 mg/kg) of methamphetamine approximately 10 min prior to the infusion of the DG, and this was not included in the Methods section. Higher catecholamine levels have been reported to slightly sharpen DG-labeled cortical columns (e.g., Craik et al., 1987, Brain Res Bul 19:495–499). In control experiments the authors have determined that methamphetamine at these doses: (i) does not produce any obvious differences in DG labeling, relative to animals in which it is not used, and (ii) has minimal effect on anesthetic level, in the authors' anesthetic regimen.
