Cover legend: Dopamine D2 receptor immunostaining in the dorsal striatum of a mouse constitutively lacking Nogo-A. Nogo-A deletion causes a region-specific increase of dopamine D2 receptor expression in the dorsal striatum. For more information, see the article by Willi et al. in this issue (pages 556–567).

- 797 Erratum: In the article “Visual Impairment in the Absence of Dystroglycan” by Jakob S. Satz, Alisdair R. Philip, Huy Nguyen, Hajime Kusano, Jane Lee, Rolf Turk, Megan J. Riker, Jasmine Hernández, Robert M. Weiss, Michael G. Anderson, Robert F. Mullins, Steven A. Moore, Edwin M. Stone, and Kevin P. Campbell, which appeared on pages 13136–13146 of the October 21, 2009 issue, there was an error in Figure 7. The labels for the Outer Plexiform Layer (OPL) were mislabeled as Ganglion Cell Layer (GCL) in A and B. The corrected Figure appears in this issue.

Correction: In the article “A Comparative Magnetic Resonance Imaging Study of the Anatomy, Variability, and Asymmetry of Broca’s Area in the Human and Chimpanzee Brain” by Simon S. Keller, Neil Roberts, and William Hopkins, which appeared on pages 14607–14616 of the November 18, 2009 issue, a diagonal sulcus was not identified in 30 chimpanzee subjects using magnetic resonance imaging. Since the publication of this article, the first author has completed an assessment of the frequency of the diagonal sulcus in an independent sample of 83 post-mortem chimpanzee cerebral hemispheres at The Central Africa Museum in Tervuren, Belgium, with Dr. Emmanuel Gilissen. A clear sulcus was identified lying between the inferior precentral sulcus and fronto-orbital sulcus—suggestive of a diagonal sulcus—in at least 15 of these hemispheres. These more direct observations are likely to be more reliable than those that led to the claim in this article that the diagonal sulcus might not exist in the chimpanzee brain. The detailed results of this post-mortem analysis will be published in the near future.

Correction: In the article “Frontal Feedback-Related Potentials in Nonhuman Primates: Modulation during Learning and under Haloperidol” by Julien Vezoli and Emmanuel Procyk, which appeared on pages 15675–15683 of the December 16, 2009 issue, the following acknowledgment was mistakenly excluded: “This research was funded by Fondation de France and Fondation Caisse d’Epargne Rhône-Alpes (Julien Vezoli).”
